

Great Teaching, Inspired Learning

NSW Minister for Education Adrian Piccoli earlier this year released a discussion paper – Great Teaching, Inspired Learning - designed to seek advice about what can be done to improve the quality of teaching in NSW schools.

“It is designed to trigger a wave of discussion and debate in the education community and the broader community about the quality of teaching in NSW schools,” Mr Piccoli said.

“Teachers in NSW already do an amazing job, but as we prepare our students for the challenges of the 21st century, we need to think very carefully about how we can ensure the teachers in their classroom are world class.

“The research from around the world is clear; the quality of the education you offer your young people is only as good as the teaching in your schools. I want us to offer our young people the best education, and that means we need the best teachers.

“Great Teaching, Inspired Learning looks at all the key stages of a teacher’s career and asks some hard questions.

“This is the ideal time for us to be having this conversation. We have new national teaching standards and curriculum, we have a new model for funding NSW public schools and we have a new wave of teachers emerging from our universities.

“We know from looking at other high performing education systems that there are lots of things we could change and do differently.

“The Great Teaching, Inspired Learning discussion paper asks the tough questions about every aspect of the teacher career lifecycle from, are we getting the right kind of people choosing teaching as a career, through to what incentives and rewards could we give those outstanding teachers in our schools to encourage them to stay in the classroom.”

Consultation finished on November 2.

The paper is available at the website schools.nsw.edu.au/greatteaching. The government will release a set of directions as a result of the consultation in early 2013.
