Media Release: Border Protection

Tom Sebo's report (GP 6/5/13)<sup>1</sup> of a recent meeting between Angus Taylor and Shadow Minister Michael Keenan reveals an interesting insight into the Liberal's border protection credentials. Clearly nothing has changed and nothing will change. When the Howard era policy on border protection was changed, the green light was turned on and will remain on when the future Liberal government change their policy again simply because the true nature and purpose of Islamic immigration is ignored.

Liberal party polling may certainly put border protection as number one concern, but what was the concern? Neither Angus Taylor or Michael Keenan in this report were able to put their finger on the connection between the 38,000 supposedly displaced asylum seekers who pay USD $15,000 to get here and the concern of the locals. From the European experience of Islamic Immigration it is time to get a handle on a few concerns:

- Economic – as the Islamic population increases in its host civilisation, social security expenditure balloons out of proportion, fuelled by the doctrine of the jizya tax and the practice of polygamy.
- Civil cohesion – With each mosque that is built, there emerges a separate centre of civil and military government and a set of ethics which have nothing in common with the west.
- Refusal of governments to acknowledge the endgame of Islamic immigration.

Mr Taylor's belief that it was important to separate genuine refugees from economic asylum seekers is correct, not recognised is that the ethical duality of Islam makes this almost impossible. The Captain Emad case is a classic example, one who posed as a refugee, turned out to be the people smuggler. The key to ending the boat arrivals is a political one, it involves dealing with the Indonesian government in the light of Political Islam. Regretfully most of our politicians were ashamed to be associated with Geert Wilders in his recent visit to Australia. Since the Dutch have had enough of the Islamization of their country their government has rebuffed the Organisation of Islamic Co-operation. Now recent polling has put Geert Wilders as heading the largest political party in the Netherlands, the PVV, The Party for Freedom. The lesson here is that unless the present government deals properly with this issue another party may arise to take its place.
