Mulch add to ease suffering of plants

As gardens suffer through hot, dry, weather, Millthorpe Garden Nursery owner Ian Rogan suggests mulch is the best way to protect plants and hold as much moisture in the ground as possible.

Mr Rogan said hay, straw or any type of organic matter are all good options and can be ordered from the nursery.

“People are getting pretty desperate about their gardens, mulch will help protect gardens from future dry weather,” he said.

Millthorpe Garden Nursery specialises in plants best suitable for the climate of Orange and surrounds with its harsh winters and frosts.

Mr Rogan said now was the time for gardeners to start thinking about what deciduous trees and shrubs they plan to plant in winter.

“Bare root ornamental and fruit trees and roses can be ordered in autumn and delivered in winter,” he said.

The nursery offers more than just the plants held in stock. Mr Rogan will even research plant varieties customers request.

“We are always sourcing specialised plants for people in the region,” he said.

“Whether they want large numbers of plants to create a privacy hedge or a wind break, it’s always wise to ask for a quote.

“Also, if you want something unique or hard to find, I have a number of contacts with wholesale plant suppliers.”

Millthorpe Garden Nursery is open on Wednesdays to Sundays from 9am to 5pm at 73 Eves Lane, three kilometres from the Millthorpe Post Office via Vittoria Road.

Alternatively contact the nursery on its website or Facebook page to place orders.

Rethinking your garden in dry times

We all love our little piece of nature, but as the years continue it’s becoming harder to maintain the sort of space we traditionally think of as a garden.

Is it time to abandon the garden altogether? Definitely not, we just need to rethink our concept of a garden according to Ann, at The Complete Garden.

At heart a garden is a mirage of natural and cultural elements, “all over the world gardens of different traditions share two common features,”

Ann said. “They are open to sky and they are a haven from the outside world.”

Creating a new dry garden may have more of the human element in these outdoor havens. Pavers, pergolas, arches, screens or gazebos draw the eye up, adding a vertical dimension to the garden. They also provide shelter from our hot summers.

Pots, urns and pedestals, either potted with plants or without, can become a structural feature. Sculptures can tie it all together. Practical, comfortable and durable furniture such as a table setting, park bench or swing lets you make the most of your garden.

“It is actually possible to introduce water into your garden despite water restrictions,” Ann said. “A water feature brings the sensory pleasure of a fountain or lake to a corner, and because they recycle water, over the course of summer they use very little water.”

The Complete Garden can help furnish and decorate your garden so you’ll spend less time maintaining it, and more time enjoying it.

Bores draw out property’s potential

WATERMIN Drillers has a fleet of drilling rigs working seven days a week.

A large proportion of their work has been for town supplies and for the owners of subdivision lifestyle blocks, who have invested a considerable amount of money on large gardens or livestock.

However, without a permanent water supply, a property cannot be utilised to any great degree at all.

Watermin offers a complete service, which includes the initial site selection, test hole drilling, design and construction of production hole, flow rate testing and completion of all paperwork to satisfy the legal requirements.

All drillers are fully qualified and licensed with the NSW Office of Water.

Watermin Drillers is a member of the Australian Drilling Industry Association and the company offers a full guarantee on all materials used in the construction of their bores and on all workmanship.
